

Prosecutors in State Courts, 2020

SUMMARY NCJ 309440

NOVEMBER 2024

In 2020, the 2,347 prosecutor offices in the United States employed a total of 35,120 attorneys. These offices handled felony cases in state courts of general jurisdiction. Nearly 12,000 attorneys were employed by offices in the largest jurisdictions, those serving populations of 1 million or more residents. Offices that served populations of fewer than 100,000 residents (6,175) had nearly 1,600 more prosecutors than those that served populations of 250,000 to 499,999 residents (4,585). Across all offices, 33,500 (95%) prosecutors were employed full time and 1,620 (5%) were employed part time.

Staff and operating expenditures

About 80% of full-time attorneys employed at state prosecutor offices were white, and half were female. In addition to attorneys, state prosecutor offices employed non-attorney staff, including investigators, victim and witness staff, support staff, review and redaction staff, and other staff. In 2020, there were 44,150 full-time non-attorney staff employed in state prosecutor offices. The number of staff employed by state prosecutor offices increased by 44% from 1992 to 2020.

State prosecutor offices reported more than $6 billion in operating expenditures in 2020. The average operating expenditures per prosecutor office was more than $2.7 million.

Prosecutorial activities

The state court prosecutor represents the state in criminal cases and is accountable to the public as an elected or appointed public official. State court prosecutors are afforded broad discretion in determining who is charged with an offense and if a case goes to trial. In 2020, more than 2.7 million felony matters were reviewed by state prosecutor offices. Prosecutor offices filed 78% of those cases in court and declined 22%. Prosecutors concluded about 1.9 million felony cases. Of these, 67% were closed
